Biography

Paloma Raggo is an Assistant Professor of Philanthropy and Nonprofit Leadership at the School of Public Policy and Administration at Carleton University. Her research focuses on leadership and nonprofit governance, global philanthropy, and research methods. Her book “Leadership and Accountability in International Nonprofit Organizations” is forthcoming with Palgrave Publishing. Her recent article “Leadership and Governance in Times of Crisis: A Balancing Act for Nonprofit Boards” published in Nonprofit and Voluntary Sector Quarterly explores how nonprofit board adapts in turbulent environments and shift between their management and leadership activities. She is a co-editor of PANL Perspectives where she regularly publishes articles on governance issues in the charitable sector and answers pressing organizational questions addressed to Dear Prof. PANL. She teaches courses on governance and leadership, research methods and community projects as well as on global philanthropy. She has won research and teaching excellence awards and is actively engaged in community organizations devoted to the promotion of whistleblowing in Canada and research on the nonprofit and voluntary sector.
